

Daniel Marino, MBA, MHA

Dan Marino specializes in shaping strategic initiatives for healthcare organizations and senior healthcare leaders in areas that include population health management, clinical integration, physician alignment, and health information technology. Additionally, he supports healthcare Boards and senior leadership teams in areas of educational, governance, and succession planning. With more than 20 years of consulting experience, Dan's commitment to healthcare quality and care excellence allows him to develop meaningful relationships with clients and guide them through transitions and transformative change. While serving as executive vice president of GE Healthcare Partners, Dan led the national consulting practice in the areas of population health, organizational strategy, health system transformation, data analytics, and health information technology. Prior to GE, as president of Health Directions, he supported numerous organizations across the country in developing and activating organizational strategies in population health, medical group development, service line growth, and financial improvement. Dan is a frequent speaker at healthcare industry conferences where he shares his insights on current trends, organizational strategy, payor contracting, and value-based care. Dan also regularly writes articles for healthcare industry publications about topics related to leadership and transformation in healthcare delivery.
